Small Town State of Mind

Abigail always had a strong connection to her hometown - but after spending four years in the city completing her post-secondary education, she made the decision to return to North Perth to begin her career. "Being away was a great experience, but it also made me realize how much I value the pace and the people here," Abigail says. "Coming back just made sense."

Born and raised in Listowel, Abigail now lives just ten minutes outside of town, where she remains close to her family, long-time friends, and the familiar places that still feel like home. "I'm lucky to have so many of the people who matter most nearby. That's also a huge part of why I chose to come back."

What stands out most to her about life in Perth County is the balance. "You get that small-town community feel, but you're not missing anything - everything you need is right here," she explains.

With both perspective from time away and deep roots in the region, Abigail is embracing this next chapter - building a future in the place that she's always called home.
