

“In small towns, neighbours are more than just the people who live in the house beside you. They’re people that you can trust and rely on for support – they become part of your circle.”

A Close-knit Community

As a hometown community advocate, Sarah knew she wanted to live and work in Listowel. “You have friends close by and many amenities; there is something here for everyone. Growing up, my parents never had to worry where I was, it’s a safe community and everyone knows one another.”

“After high school, I studied human resources and business administration at Lambton College - I knew right away that I didn’t like the city,” says Sarah. Realizing a rural setting with a short commute would be ideal, Sarah applied for a position in her hometown and started her career in the public sector. “My role is unique as I work for the Municipality and Fire Department. It’s different every day and I like that I never know what I’m walking into, it’s exciting. I establish so many relationships and people start to remember me. Everything is more personal here,” explains Sarah.

With the small town atmosphere, living and working in Perth County has been perfect for Sarah. “I love our community, with events like Paddyfest or our trails, there is always something going on or something to do, it doesn’t matter what your interests are.” For anyone considering relocating to Perth County, Sarah strongly encourages them to do so. “If you move here, you’ll become part of the community and it won’t take long to adjust. It’s a very friendly place.” ■
