HUCKLEBERRY HIVES

Founded by Passion, Fueled by Pollinators

Since 2017, Huckleberry Hives has been a proudly woman-owned beekeeping business rooted in the heart of Perth County, Ontario. Founded by Jodi Roth, a passionate advocate for pollinators and sustainable agriculture, the business began with a deep curiosity sparked by her time assisting at Nith Valley Apiaries and quickly grew into a thriving small-scale apiary known for its quality, care, and community spirit.

Huckleberry Hives specializes in small-batch, raw, cold-extracted honey and handcrafted beeswax candles, each made with minimal processing to preserve the natural benefits and pure taste of the hive. From wildflower to goldenrod, every jar of honey reflects the diverse blooms of the surrounding countryside and the health of the bees that create it.

In addition to finished products, the business supports the beekeeping community by offering queen bees, nucleus colonies (nucs), and starter supplies for new and seasoned beekeepers alike. Jodi also shares her knowledge through seasonal “Buzz About Bees” educational tours inviting people of all ages to experience the magic and importance of honeybees firsthand.

With a focus on environmental stewardship, ethical practices, and thoughtful production, Huckleberry Hives has become a trusted local brand for customers who care about where their food and handmade goods come from. Their products are available online, at markets, and in curated gift sets that bring the sweetness of the hive to homes across Ontario.

At its heart, Huckleberry Hives is about more than just honey, it's about nurturing connections: between people, pollinators, and the land we share.
